

Accounting for Architects & Draughtspeople

“While the drafting stage of any building project is crucial to its success, planning is absolutely vital to the success of your business. We can help you with the all important selection of your business structure, your branding, website, payroll and software selection. This is in addition to the usual small business compliance issues of GST, BAS, PAYG and Superannuation.”

Melanie Robinson - Partner at More Than Numbers

Having an accountant who understands your architectural business can provide significant benefits. We recognise the fact that as an architect or draughtsman you have to deal with clients who frequently change their mind and have unrealistic expectations, often without a budget to match. While this can be frustrating, our brief is to help you reduce your frustration with tax, bookkeeping, financial and compliance issues.

Over the years we have helped a number of architects and draughts people through the various stages of their business life cycle and we can provide you with a range of accounting, tax and business coaching services to support and grow your business. Some key services include financial modelling to assess various ‘what if’ scenarios, cash flow projections, payroll and tax advice. We also use industry benchmarks to compare your business performance against your peers to help you assess what is working in your architectural or drafting business and what needs working on.

Our client brief also includes helping you grow your personal wealth and our financial planning services can help you with tax effective strategies including negative gearing of property and the establishment and management of your own self managed super fund. While tax returns and Business Activity Statements are important, it is our services beyond compliance that distinguish us from other accounting firms. Our marketing skills and intricate knowledge of the architectural industry can give you a serious competitive edge.
